This wonderful grist mill near Tatamagouche has been in production since 1874. It is located in a picturesque gorge on Matheson's Brook. The mill boasts a Scottish kiln where oats are toasted using maple wood as fuel, giving the oats a flavour that guarantees the best Scottish oatcakes. The miller, John Taylor, practices the picking skills required to dress the millstones each year before a season of grinding. John is the successor to Archie MacDonald, the previous miller at Balmoral Grist Mill for 40 years. The Mill is located in a picturesque spot among a mature mixed-forest setting. At the Museum Shop, you can purchase freshly ground flour and baked goods made with the mill's products. This 3-storey early, water-powered mill has an overshot water wheel.

Ross Farm Museum is a 24-hectare (60-acre) historic, working farm illustrating pioneer farm life of rural Nova Scotia. The site and interpreters portray the operations of a typical family farm from the late 1800's to early 1900's. Growing cereal crops and livestock and operating a farm kitchen garden are part of the operations, but the site also has an active program showing other skills typical of this area. These activities include coopering, woodlot management, ox handling and training, ox shoeing, black smithing, and family life skills. Ross Farms also offers exhibits of farm equipment used throughout Nova Scotia. Visitors can see animals from historic breeds such as Canadian horses, oxen, Cotswold and Southdown sheep, and Berkshire pigs and rare poultry breeds, including Cochins and Hamburghs. Open year round, check for hours.

This water-powered mill operated at the height of sheep shearing in the late 1800s. People arrived by ox-cart with their bags of wool to have it carded for spinning, knitting, weaving or made into batts for wool beds and quilts. Hands on program with costumed interpreters. Admission. Open June 1 - September 30. Check for hours.
